How to put a stop to a world of pain for a child

The Jiggers story

In the hill villages of Busia, a county in Kenya, children are plagued by a parasitic infection called Jiggers Disease.

The tiny parasite burrows into their feet causing wounds that fester and do not heal. This condition impacts on their immune systems. They walk gingerly, each step bringing pain.

Volunteers make the long journey to the villages to spray the dusty ground and kill the Jiggers parasites.

They gently tend to the children, carefully cleaning their feet and applying medications to soothe the pain and heal the wounds.

But the children must have shoes if they are to avoid reinfection.

For the lack of shoes

Chrisphine Ochieng Okumu is a man on a mission.

The executive director of Blue Bells Orphans' support program, he is also an active champion of the Jiggers Elimination Program.

He works tirelessly on behalf of the children and their community, determined to eliminate this disease and its impact on these vulnerable children's lives.

Despite his efforts, the challenge is daunting with at least 250 children afflicted.

So, he is pleading for shoes.

How can you help?

CreateCare Global is working hard to establish a regular supply of shoes for these children to stop reinfestation.
